Here's why we love these new security shutters

[Advertorial]

Local security service provider Trellidor Rustenburg is very excited about a new addition to their range that bridges the gap between purely functional protection and an attractive home addition. The newly-launched Trellidor Security Shutter is an aluminium Louvre-style shutter with purpose-designed strengthening features that lift it into the security barrier realm.

"At first glance, Trellidor Security Shutter doesn't look vastly different to any other aluminium Louvre shutter on the market. It isn't until you take a closer look that you notice that our D and D designers have really made these shutters a cut above the rest," Franchise Manager Sarie Gordon said.

The first point of departure from similar shutters is that there is no rod down the centre to operate the Louvres. The Trellidor Security Shutter is noticeably uncluttered. The mechanism that opens and closes the Louvres is hidden inside, so there are no metal bits on the outside. You simply open or close one Louvre by hand and the rest follow.

A unique S-shaped profile ensures that the Louvres close snugly, providing an upright panel with better rain run-off and less light penetration. When open, these Louvres provide improved airflow. "This is primarily a security barrier so our team had to ensure that the Trellidor Security Shutter was strong enough under attack to live up to our reputation for barrier excellence. With this in mind our developers reinforced every single Louvre with a threaded internal steel bar along the entire length of the Louvre to make it as strong as possible under attack."

Other strengthening features include a patented bump-proof and pick resistant Trellidor locking system with unique key and serial number. The shutters provide security even when the Louvres are in the open position and performed extremely well when attacked with a number of different tools in test conditions.

"It has become a necessity to install physical protection against home invaders, so why not buy something that looks good as well? These shutters add an element of style while protecting doors and windows against a break-in. Local residents are welcome to come into our showroom to see it for themselves," Gordon said.
